

Femicide and the day after
By Jackie Campbell
Saltillo, Coahuila, Mexico
Resume of the article of opinion
Written for the Compilation "Re-imagining the World Order",
Edited by Investigators Rimple Mehta, Sandali Thakur and Debaroti Chakraborty.
October, 2020

The information that the Pandemic hides have not changed. According to data from the Executive Secretariat of the National Public Security System prior to the Pandemic, in Mexico there are 10 women murdered a day. On May 8, the National Human Rights Commission (CNDH) warned in a statement that domestic violence has increased during the quarantine by Covid19. Unlike what the president declared in his morning "homilies", home is not a safe space for women. Although the northern state of Mexico, Coahuila, is not the state in the country in which most women are being killed, just last year femicides increased 600%. According to the National Survey of Victimization and Perception on Public Safety for 2019, of the 16 million crimes that were made public, there is 95% impunity, including crimes of femicide violence. With these data the doubt is reiterated. Guilty people is been manufactured at the Coahuila prosecutor's office or justice is selective when the pressure for the government image is evident.

Violence in general, but in this case, femicide violence, does not stop. Authorities do not want to show numbers about murdered women when in reality the difficult situation of living together 24/7 has increased the suffering and pain of women. Only by making visible what happens to us and creating sororal actions, or sharing it in women's circles, we are going to reinvent ourselves and re-birth the humanity that we experienced within this pandemic caused by Covid-19. Only women will be able to create a world more respectful to the planet. If the patriarchal system still violated us and continue with closed eyes, it will not be possible, so my approach is to strengthen networks and be brave to create our own ones, and join in the bonds of the diversity of women who want the world that our generation and the followings deserve.